- b. Radio School - Classes in elementary principles of radio were conducted here. Recruits were sent to this school upon reporting to the unit. [redacted]

[redacted] Duration of the course was one year. On the average 70 soldiers were in one class. After graduation of a class, a new one was started. This was the Battalion Radio School. After completion of school, soldiers were sent out to various companies. Students were billeted on the second floor. The classrooms were on the first floor. The area of these two buildings was enclosed by a mesh wire fence topped with barbed wire. The gate was located at the south corner of the enclosure, and was guarded by a soldier armed with a submachine gun.

5. Four Buildings - identically, brick, plastered, 35m x 12m x 15m, two-storied, tile gable roof. The buildings appeared to be of old construction.
- a. Quarters for Enlisted Personnel - approximately 150 soldiers were billeted in this building. Aside from the headquarters company, the second company of the 135th Battalion was quartered here. CQ was on duty at night.
- b. Battalion Headquarters - Both floors were made up of offices. On the first floor there were offices for the CQ, supply, ordnance officers, receiving center of the second company, and for the motor pool officer. On the second floor there were offices for the communications officer, political officer, commanding officer, secret control, (all classified information was kept in safes), and for finance. At night a CQ was in charge of the building.
- c. Enlisted Mess Hall - Mess hall was on the first floor. Second floor was occupied by bachelor officers' quarters.
- d. Officers' Quarters - Married officers and their families lived here. The building was separated from the others by a wooden fence. A small gate led into enclosure from the east. Gate was always locked. A door in the inner wooden fence was used by officers and their dependents, and was always open. The entire area of this portion of the caserne measured 200m x 150m, and was enclosed with a mesh wire fence topped with barbed wire. A wooden gate led into caserne from the north. During the day, an unarmed soldier was stationed in a small shack near the gate. Theoretically identifications of military personnel were to be checked, but such practice had been neglected by guards. Only when the sergeant of the guard was in the vicinity did the guards become strict.
6. Three Identical Buildings - brick, plastered, exact dimensions not recalled, gable tarpaper roof.
- a. Radio Repair Shop - All radio apparatus of the unit were repaired here by a crew of five technicians. In case a radar set was reported defective, a crew of technicians was sent out to repair it. [redacted] one or two new radar sets were kept on hand (Building Point 7.). They were crated, [redacted] Crates were painted green. An armed guard patrolled this building at night.
- b. Storage - All kinds of electrical equipment, such as, field telephones, cables, batteries, etc., were kept here. [redacted]
